The Museum of the Southwest is pleased to present the publication of the book Burton Pritzker: Forgotten Planes and this exhibition of selected works from the series. Forgotten Planes began as a private commission photographed in eastern New Mexico and in his studio. Pritzker was invited to create a series absent of parameter, which is every artist's dream. After seeing the work, I concluded that such a monumental artistic achievement should be documented for the future via publication, and that the Museum of the Southwest should strive to acquire a portfolio of the prints for its collection. This exhibition and book, together with the Museum's acquisition of eighty-seven of the photographs for its permanent collection, represent the fulfillment of that goal. —Tom Jones, Executive Director Museum of the Southwest
